Sara Wolfe RM MBA

Sara Wolfe is a registered Indigenous midwife and founding partner of Seventh Generation Midwives Toronto. Her practice specializes in providing culturally safe and respectful care for urban Indigenous families. She co-led the development of the Indigenous-led Toronto Birth Centre – a first of its kind facility for birth using an Indigenous framework and governance model that is also open to the mainstream population. Sara is a community research associate at the Well Living House Research Centre at St. Michael's Hospital and graduate of the Executive MBA program from the Rotman School of Management at the University of Toronto.

Currently Sara is coordinating an innovative wrap-around project to improve health and social service integration to address health and family integrity outcomes for Indigenous families who are at increased risk of child protection involvement and/or apprehension.

EDUCATIONAL OBJECTIVES

1. To gain a better understanding of the historical, systemic and political issues that impact ACCESS to healthcare for Indigenous peoples.
2. To increase awareness of the gaps in reproductive health OUTCOMES for Indigenous women and families.
3. To consider the opportunities and SOLUTIONS that can improve the health and wellbeing for the faces yet to come.
